Circuit Description: The Classic Reverb 20W amplifier features a special preamp that has two different modes of operation. The standard 1950’s style circuit uses a single traditional Volume control. By pulling the “Boost” control, a gain stage is inserted into the front end of the preamplifier. The amount of Boost can be adjusted by rotating the control. In this mode, the Volume control now acts as a Master Volume control, typical of later tube amplifiers. The amplifier has Bass and Treble tone controls and also a Mid Cut switch. This switch is useful when playing a guitar with humbucker pickups, and provides a mid “scoop” similar to blackface Fender amplifiers. The amplifier also features a tube driven Accutronics spring reverb and a foot switch.

Why is this amplifier different? Good question...

The Classic Reverb 20W amplifier is inspired by the Tweed amps of the late 1950’s. My goal was to use a minimalist approach, providing the sweetest tone, with features that were never incorporated into the 1950’s amplifiers, such as the Reverb and Gain Boost/Master Volume capabilities.

In short, this amp is hard to categorize. You just have to play it!
